A contrastive study on the C-E translation

ABSTRACT

Verbs of perception include sight, hearing, smell, taste and touch, of which zhijian belongs to sight is very common in literary works, and its semantic meaning also begins to change with the development of time. Based on the original text and two translated versions of the Water Margin, this paper makes a comparative analysis of the translation strategies of zhijian on the basis that Chinese emphasizes subjective consciousness and the mixed consciousness of subjectivity and objectivity, while English stresses objective consciousness with a clear boundary between subjectivity and objectivity. According to previous studies, this paper regroups the appearance of zhijian and divides it into two categories, namely zhijian at the beginning of a sentence and at the beginning of a minor sentence. On the basis of the context and the changing function of zhijian, that is, the function of being a verb and being a discourse marker, it can be concluded that as the meaning of a verb, the real action, the meaning of zhijian is expressed by “seeing”, so translators usually adopt literal translation; while as a discourse marker, it is no longer the main component of sentence structure, but to highlight the following information, translators will adopt deletion, conversion and retaining. It can be seen that translators often need to convert Chinese characterized by subjective consciousness into English dominated by objective consciousness, thus conforming to various meaning of zhijian.

1. Introduction

In this paper, the English versions of the Water Margin by Sidney Shapiro and Pearl S Buck are taken as the corpus. And zhijian has appeared 895 times in the original text, but its meaning is not all the same. Wang Yi (2015) examined the path and mechanism of the evolution of the function of zhijian, concluded that zhijian can evolve into verbs and adverbs, and further evolve into discourse markers, which have the functions of introducing new scenes, enhancing the sense of being at the place, highlighting the unexpected, enhancing interaction, etc. She divides zhijian into four meanings: 仅仅看见；只要、只是、只有；看见；话语标记. Wang Jianguo (2016) divides the processing and use of verbs of perception into corresponding conversion and non-corresponding.

The Water Margin is a great literary treasure in Ming and Qing Dynasties, with the same word zhijian appearing so frequently but has different meanings. Therefore, it is of great significance to study its English translation.

This paper analyzes different translation strategies based on the function of zhijian as a verb and a discourse marker in the Water Margin from the difference between the subjective and objective consciousness, namely Chinese emphasizes subjective consciousness and the mixed consciousness of subjectivity and objectivity, while English stresses objective consciousness with a clear boundary between subjectivity and objectivity.

2. The Analysis of the Classification of zhijian and Its Translation

On the basis of the function, the classification of zhijian falls into two categories: zhijian at the beginning of a sentence and at the beginning of a minor sentence. The original function works as a verb, which can be seen as “witness/see”. As time goes by, the function and meaning of zhijian is different from its original. At this time, zhijian begins to evolve further into discourse markers, which has no predicative function and is not a syntactic component. Its function is usually to emphasize a new topic in the following sentence.

2.1 Zhijian at the Beginning of A Sentence

 Mostly, zhijian at the beginning of a sentence can be seen as a discourse marker without the specific agent, which only reflects the perspective of the narrator or the author to introduce a new scene or situation.

(1)只见班部丛中,宰相赵哲、参政文彦博,出班: “目今京师瘟疫盛行,伤损军民甚多。伏望陛下,释罪宽恩,省刑薄税。奏曰”【金夹批:奇事奇文。】那老叟不言姓名,只见化阵清风而去。耳边道八个甚字?道是: “文有文曲,武有武曲。” (kindle, P197)

Sidney Shapiro: The old man went in, picked up the baby, and whispered eight words into his ear. At once the prince stopped crying. The old man disappeared in a puff of air without even revealing his name. …(P9)

Pearl S. Buck: The old man entered straightway and he lifted up the babe and he whispered certain words into the babe’s ear and the babe ceased its weeping. Now the old man would not tell his surname or his name, but who watched saw him change into a wind and vanish. …(P4)

Here, the story tells that Barefoot God from Heaven cried night and day when he was born on earth, and Heaven sent the god Taibai changing himself into an old man to come to earth to deal with that. The guard led him into the palace and there the Emperor commanded him to enter into the private palace and see the baby. So we can know that zhijian here was the perspective of the emperor, which does not function as a discourse marker of a new scene. The original sentence at first shows the action or the state of the old man, but the following sentence shifts the focus to what the emperor has seen, which highlights the mixed consciousness of subjectivity and objectivity in Chinese. Shapiro translated into “the old man disappeared in a puff of air” by deleting zhijian and just described the result of the old man’s action. He used “the old man” as the subject followed by the action “disappear” meaning “passing from view”, and directly described the objective environment implicating that the old man and his disappearance are what the emperor has seen which indicates the objective consciousness of English.

Pearl S. Buck also used “the old man” as the subject but she explicitly points out who has seen by translating into “who watched saw him”. As what I have mentioned before, it prefers objective consciousness in English. The addition of a new perspective “who watched” will interrupt the fluency of the old man’s action, and obscure the boundary between subjectivity-oriented Chinese and objectivity-oriented English. All in all, Sidney Shapiro’s translation better reflects the objective consciousness of English.

2.2 zhijian at the Beginning of the Minor Sentence

2.2.1 “看……+只见” (Look…+zhijian) as the Result/Object of Seeing

(3) 大头领看时，只见二头领红巾也没了，身上绿袍扯得粉碎，下得马，倒在厅前，口里说道：“哥哥救我一救！……”只得一句。(Kindle, 2120)

Sidney Shapiro: The head bandit looked, His lieutenant had lost his red hat, his green robe was ripped and tattered, Number Two dismounted and collapsed in front of the hall. (P63)

Pearl S. Buck: Then the first chieftain looked and saw the second chieftain, his red turban gone and his green robe torn into tatters, and he was dismounting from his horse. He tumbled down before the house, crying, “Elder Brother, save me!” and he gave but this one cry. (P4)

The original sentence connects “looked” and zhijian as we Chinese like to repeat what we see from our perspective, or add a specific perspective to the environment, which reflects a strong sense of subjectivity or a mixed consciousness of subjectivity and objectivity. Wang Yi (2015) thinks that “见” is the result or object of “看” based on the semantic relation. As “看” in the previous sentence, so zhijian in the following sentence is redundant in its function. Therefore, “只见二头领红巾也没了，身上绿袍扯得粉碎 ……” is the result of “看”。It’s correct for Sidney Shapiro to delete zhijian by just translating “看” into “look”, which it’s concise to shape a focus chain. While Pearl S. Buck translated “看” and zhijian into “looked and saw” will cause redundancy because these two words are synonyms, and repeated the perspective of the character will strengthen the subjective consciousness instead.

2.2.2 Time Adverbs + zhijian

(4) 太尉又道：“我正走不动，方欲再上山坡，只见松树傍边，转出一个道童，骑著一头黄牛，吹著管铁笛，正过山来。（Kindle, P309）

Sidney Shapiro: “By then I could hardly walk. Just as I was about to continue up the slope, a novice, sitting on a yellow ox and playing a metal flute, came riding over the rise. (P13)

Pearl S. Buck: Again the Commander said, “Truly had I no strength to walk, and even as I thought to climb higher up the ridge I saw come out from among the pines an acolyte flute. (P8)

Wang Yi thinks that some time adverbs such as “正” “却待” “方欲” “忽然” (the first three imply intention, and the last one mean sudden) followed by zhijian, and the following sentence after zhijian leads to a sudden or unexpected scene. Here, the commander is talking about his feelings, and “我正走不动” is what “I” think or what “I” want to do next, while mixing with what “I” see (只见松树傍边，转出一个道童，骑著一头黄牛，吹著管铁笛，正过山来), so the meaning of “方欲” meaning intention and of zhijian meaning what it’s seen are disconnected. Such being the case, zhijian expressing the meaning of action which reflects the perspective of subject has changed into the perspective of the speaker. That is to say, zhijian has transformed from a verb to a discourse marker. Sidney Shapiro transformed zhijian from the meaning of action to directly describe the following information, that is, translating the objective things, “a novice, sitting on a yellow ox and playing a metal flute, came riding over the rise”. In this way, the gradation of what “I” feel and what “I” see is rich and objective, not just only focus on “my” view any more. On the contrary, Pearl S. Buck’s translation “even as I thought to climb higher up the ridge I saw…” by following the structure of the original sentence will cause some problems. On the one hand, the addition of “I saw” may cause redundancy as the following description is exactly what “I” saw. On the other hand, the translator confused the meaning of zhijian as a verb with it as a discourse marker so that the translation indicating mixed consciousness of objectivity and subjectivity can’t comply with the characteristics of English focusing on objective consciousness.

2.2.3 Transforming zhijian into Other Verbs of Perception

(5) 太尉哪里肯听。众人只得把石板一齐扛起。看时，石板底下，却是一个万丈深浅地穴。只见穴内刮喇喇
一声响亮，那响非同小可。响亮过处，只见一道黑气，直冲上半天里，空中散作百十道金光，望四面八方去了。（kindle, P359）

Sidney Shapiro: When the men had removed the slab, a pit one hundred thousand feet deep was revealed. A great ripping sound was heard, and a black cloud shot out of the pit. It tore through half a corner of the roof and split it in two and that cloud filled half the heavens.

Here, we can tell from “只见穴内刮喇喇一声响亮” that zhijian is not to introduce what is to be seen but what you hear. Actually, it describes all men’s perception. “看时，石板底下，却是一个万丈深浅地穴” is what all men have seen, and “只见穴内刮喇喇一声响亮，那响非同小可” is what they have heard, the men as the subject and their perception form a mixed subjective and objective phenomenon. And the translators both noticed the difference and used “was heard” to transfer the meaning of zhijian, which can make readers focus on the description of men, and deliver more fluently by shaping focus chain. By the way, the passive voice can better reflect the objective consciousness of English.

“响亮过处，只见一道黑气，直冲上半天里” also shows the mixed phenomenon of hearing and seeing. It means the black cloud may produce from the sound according to the context. But two translators adopt different strategies. Sidney Shapiro deleted zhijian by just translating the situation, changing the subjective feeling into the objective phenomenon. And the translators both noticed the difference, and used “was heard” to transfer the meaning of zhijian, which can make readers focus on the description of men, and deliver more fluently by shaping focus chain. By the way, the passive voice can better reflect the objective consciousness of English.

2.2.4 zhijian+ Existential Sentence

(7)只见一个小小茶坊正在路口。（kindle, P991）Sidney Shapiro: On a street corner he saw a small teahouse. (P34)

(8)只见血渌渌的两个死尸，又吃一惊!（kindle, P17546）Sidney Shapiro: When the men had removed the slab, a pit one hundred thousand feet deep was revealed. A great ripping sound was heard, and a black cloud shot out of the pit. It tore through half a corner of the roof and split it in two and that cloud filled half the heavens.

We should be aware that not all words or phrases containing sound can be translated into “hear”. The meaning of “叫苦不迭” can be sighing, ejaculating concerning the misery and complaining, some of which may contain sound, but mostly it is regarded as a state, not an action of uttering sound. It’s different from the previous example, so the following information of zhijian should not be taken as what they hear. Such being the case, Sidney Shapiro just translated the objective environment by using “where” to connect his action and what he sees, which strengthens Marshal Hong’s perspective without shifting the focus. As for Pearl S. Buck, she noticed the difference from the previous zhijian and translated into “he saw”, which catches the right meaning of “叫苦不迭”. But I think here Pearl S. Buck’s translation is better because “saw” can stress the striking scene and create a totally different effect on visual image. While “where” treating as a background just like a plain statement which cannot fully deliver the feeling of the narrator.
that someone or something exists, appears, or disappears somewhere. From the translations above, two translators both translated zhijian into “see the sight of”, so we can know that “zhijian + existential sentence” means what people see. Here, zhijian is not a discourse marker but a physical action. But “the sight of” and “it could be seen…” show a more objective consciousness because the noun phrase “the sight of” indicates a more well-defined boundary than the verb “see”, and the structure of “it could be seen” is a typical example showing the objectivity of the speaker when it comes to the description of an environment. However, Sidney Shapiro translated “只见顶上有勒死伤痕一道” into “His throat was cut” indicating zhijian can also be deleted if the translator see it as a hint to introduce new information. And deleting zhijian and focusing on the new information can also centralize the attention of readers, so that the new information can be strengthened to show the objective consciousness of English. In the end, literary translation and omission can achieve the goal, that is to convert the subjective consciousness into objective consciousness.

2.2.5 “zhijian” as a Single Unit

(11) 军马到得栅门边望时，只见：尘土蔽日，杀气遮天；两路军兵投镇上，四条好汉下山来。(Kindle, 13000-13001)

Sidney Shapiro: At the gate they saw beneath a huge cloud of dust which blocked the sun an approaching host whose fierce aura obscured the heavens. Two columns of troops were closing in on the town. Four gallant men had come down from the mountain. (P347)

Pearl S. Buck: When they had come up to the city gate they looked and they saw dust rising to the sky and the very heavens were filled with the fury of war. Two ranks of soldiers by the gates standing still, four goodly fellows riding down the hill. (P322)

Here, the position of zhijian is different from the previous ones because it’s like a single unit. Although I have mentioned “看……+只见” (look…+zhijian) indicating zhijian is redundant and the following sentence after it is the result of “看”，here, “望……+只见” contains the same meaning with different degree. As a discourse marker, zhijian appears in the form of “只见”，a colon after zhijian which means it’s relatively independent from the following sentence and it clearly shows the boundary between “my” action and “what” I see. And the pause between “军马到得栅门边望时” and “尘土蔽日，杀气遮天；两路军兵投镇上，四条好汉下山来” indicates the narrator deliberately draw a line between the two parts in a way to hint or give readers a strong sense of as if they’re being here. The isolated zhijian with a characteristic of subjectivity appears like a sentence, and the following information with a characteristic of objectivity became a complete sentence, which makes a sharp contrast and shows the shifted focus. Sidney Shapiro deleted zhijian and used “saw” to fix the focus, which achieved the goal of objective consciousness but failed to reproduce the narrator’s hint or give readers a strong sense of as if they’re being here. And Pearl S. Buck translated into “they saw” cannot show narrator’s deliberation of shifting the focus and his mental process. In the end, zhijian as a discourse marker, but sometimes its position is given a special meaning by the narrator. Therefore, translators should reproduce what it implicates and take narrator’s intention or mental process into consideration.

3. Conclusion

Chinese has a strong subjective consciousness or a mixed consciousness of subjectivity and objectivity, that is, it often describes objective things or phenomena with strong subjective feelings. On the other hand, native English speakers focus on objective consciousness, that is, describe and translate objective things or phenomena directly without exerting subjective feelings.

By analyzing the appearance and characteristics of zhijian, this paper concluded that the English translation of zhijian in the Water Margin is mainly based on its two functions, the original verb meaning and the discourse marker, and its use as discourse markers in the Water Margin is more than its original verb meaning. When comes to the meaning of a verb, that is, the real action, the meaning of zhijian equals to “seeing”, so translators usually adopt literal translation. While zhijian as a discourse marker, it is no longer the main component of sentence structure but to highlight the following information. The blending of subjectivity and objectivity embodied in the source language needs to be converted into objectivity in English. There are generally three situations. First, what zhijian introduce is not what you actually see, but what your other senses receive. At this time, the visual meaning of the original verb meaning is weakened, and the translator needs to convert into other verbs of perception. Second, when zhijian changes from the perspective of the character to that of the narrator or the author, the purpose is often to introduce new topics, so translator will delete it, which reflects the conversion of subjective consciousness into objective consciousness. Third, when comes to “zhijian+existential sentences”, zhijian is not only used as a discourse marker, but also as the action of “seeing”, that is to say, its original meaning as a verb is also retained, so translators usually translate directly or delete it.

From the above comparative analysis, it can be seen that Sidney Shapiro often adopts the method of deletion when translating zhijian into English, which better reflects the conversion of subjective consciousness into objective consciousness. Translators should understand and attach importance to the conversion of subjective consciousness and objective consciousness so as to make a successful conversion in the process of translation and enhance the fluency and authenticity of the translation.
